Canada's new government is

SUPERCHARGING HOMEBUILDING

Canadians are in a housing crisis. Far too many Canadians – particularly young Canadians – are struggling to find homes they can afford.

Canada's new government is stepping up with a bold new approach and unprecedented investments to increase our housing supply.

On Sept. 14, Prime Minister Mark Carney launched Build Canada Homes (BCH) – a new federal agency that will build affordable housing at scale and at speed.

BCH will scale up construction and build an entirely new housing industry – one that improves productivity and positions Canada as a world leader in modern homebuilding.

THERE ARE THREE KEY PILLARS TO THIS NEW APPROACH. BCH WILL:

1. PARTNER with industry and other orders of government to build affordable housing, with an initial $13 billion Investment.
2. DEPLOY capital and apply innovative technologies to build homes faster and more sustainably, 365 days a year.
3. ADOPT our new “Buy Canadian” policy and prioritize projects that use Canadian lumber and other materials.

BCH will help fight homelessness by building transitional and supportive housing in partnership with provinces, territories, municipalities, and Indigenous communities. Our new government is bringing federal lands, faster approvals, and strong incentives to the table, while the private sector delivers capacity, innovation, supply chains, and financing.
